HARD NEWS

Camp Lovewave:

- talking about Babaji and Sai Baba – living masters who never went anywhere!
- Terrance McKenna and Dr Albert Hoffman and LSD and the mouldy rye bread & played with it to extract the LSD; he got some on his fingertips and somehow got it on his face or on his tongue – riding his bicycle home in Munich, tripping his brains out – went into the 5th dimension yet he got home safely!

Teran: when the Beatles started meditating with Maharisi Yogi; George Harrison who is here along with Harriet and others who are right here

- part of the story today was the Aries New Moon [Thurs] and the high frequencies – we are in Sat Yuga, yet still watching the ends of the Kali yuga as it leaves and is bringing up the dross and why it is imperative to meditate every day and do the sadna / practices to bring the communities of living love, living light right into our faces
- Ties in with what Judy Beebe brought up as we get to the resonance place with the GEM spheres - instant manifestation right in our faces! Instant healing!

- Bernie Sanders wins the Wyoming Dems Caucus – magic to believe in
 - Trump is doing a $100,000 event in NYC & is charging $100,000 to those who attend;
 - he's trying to link 9/11 to the fact that we have this fake story – all CIA, ISIL
 - not sure what Trump will say – PAY NO ATTENTION to the fake hair man pulling back the curtain and lying all the time.

Teran, Berry, and Nigel: 9/11 done by our own country and the Mossad; we pray peace for Mr Netanyahu

- Meditation is the most important thing for us to focus on; it changes everything He brings it up because Teran, B and Nigel brought up that all the living masters named above – about breaking out of the matrix and stepping into the naqual as Mother said last night:
 - the plant forms that came to the planet gazillions of years ago and filtered from the solar winds into our atmosphere, landed on the planet and sprouted; have all the blueprints of all the starships we will ever need as well as the merkaba vehicle that Nassim talks about
- Also about Teran growing up in Deerfield, IL: he went from tacky tacky houses with white picket fences where you don't talk of DMT, space ships, Sai Baba or Dr Keshe; Teran talked of how he woke up as he graduated from Purdue University with honours, and went to Haight Ashbury and tripped out and heard what the masters had to say: talked of Ram Dass handing a sugar cube to D R Baba – he took it, and didn't even feel the LSD and only had a slight headache which he cured by going to his 3rd eye and some meditation.
 - There have been catalysts to move us along the path – all we need is the DMT in our brains in the pineal gland is all we need; it activates the kundalini energy
 - They played a clip of John Fugelsang; he used to be on current TV before it became RT Tv – he interviewed George Harrison before he left the planet and George talked of meeting Maharishi and got the Shaktipat directly in his 3rd eye right away! George went on the path to bring in the wisdom of Ravi Shankar
 - They talked of 9/11 and how when he confronted Matt Taibi on his show and asked him to talk of 9/11: Matt totally changed his voice and wouldn't talk about it
 - Folks get pressured by the 13 families

Sam Seder: brought up how the 13 families killed Michael Hastings by using remote control technology and made the car hit the tree

- Jeremy Scahill: the book on General Stanley McCrystal

Tom the Cat called: Bernie is going to talk with Mr Francis in the Vatican – and you'll hear from nowhere else; Bernie will give him a talking to about not representing the Chair of Peter or the Office of the Christ; Ratzinger not too long for this world, his energy is diminishing – put all in the circle of support

- As our galactic friends show up – no dates, yet it is in this nano second of this eternal NOW – the energies are such

Tom said - as one of Mother's bridge officers on the Nibiru & the New Jerusalem:

- we have some explaining to do, as we show up in your midst; we will explain the millions of years and how the wayward brothers and sisters used the siddas in a not appropriate manner; it was not about salvation, was about domination, indoctrination, control and slave labour camps etc
- ties in with larger stories about the hidden history of the solar system –
 - every solar system has 12-15 planets [not just 9 planets]; generally, when planets circle a central sun, there are generally 12 -14 planets as well as many moons.
 - R has been to Ganymede, one of the moons circling Jupiter which is a place of living light, living love; there are so many Ashtar Command people working there; yet the scientists are talking of sending a probe there & will find vast oceans there, bigger than what we have on earth
- Tom talked to Rama about a movie called 2010 - the year we made contact: at the climax of the movie, US and Russia getting ready to do a first strike against each other – Dr Frank Poole is on the space ship called Discovery; they re-built Hal, the computer – all of a sudden the beings on Ganymede take over all the equipment on the space ship, and Hal, part of the computer networkd tells the people he has a message from those on Ganymede: the folks say “stand down; we want to talk”. The nuclear escalation gets neutralized simply by dialogue –
 - this is the message from Tom the Cat – a dialogue we need to have with each other, with all the countries & it supersedes whatever the Vatican has to say!
- and little Bernie Sanders from VT will have a chat with Putin privately, down the road a bit as well as with Mr Francis how the bear sleeps in the woods: about what is coming next and if he wants to make peace with his god, so be it.
 - This is the next evolutionary leap in consciousness about what needs to be said!
- all the republicans are freaking out about him going to the Vatican to talk to Francis – they know this will change something!
- It leads to Disclosure – it is simply about sharing a message from the heart.
- R was alerted to this story by Twitter: Gordon Duff has put out 2 YouTube videos Ap 7,8
 - he has said in the 4 page article that Dr Keshe technology absolutely works, and US and UK are freaking over this
 - Dr Keshe was instrumental in bringing down the US drone in Iran – there is no ISIS – it's all Black Ops, as is the Taliban
 - this is why the Poppy Lady is in Afghanistan; she used to work with the Mujahadin in Kabul, and they became the Taliban; these warlords have been there for centuries and they know the original story story that goes back to the birth of Buddha who was born in Afghanistan NOT India!
 - All these stories need to be told!
- Bernie won in Wyoming – that must mean that Hillary was going to try and flip the vote – so someone must have stopped her!

- And he is going to take NY: Bernie is the man to do this into the next level and the 13 families are just petrified!
- Yes, they are just us except they use the energies to kill billions and billions within the last 35 years; Mother has said they have to go to 2nd death – they may be able to talk to mother after 2nd death

R: as Luke beat his father in Return of the Jedi: he said I love you Father – and Darth Vader and became anikan Skywalker!

- we are bringing heaven into this dimension - we don't have to go somewhere else to be happy!

R: It's right here in the 5th Dimension: gives him such great joy to talk about this – he has seen all of this as he's talking to all of us: it's about ecstatic joy – like when you hang out with Sai Baba, Baba Ji – can't fake that with control or mind control technology - it's the shakti pat that can last for a long time

- Bernie talks about such simple things we have not heard since the time of JFK – and JFK, Marilyn Monroe and Bobby K Sr are working from behind the veil – only there is no veil They knew that JFK would have to stay to make things work

- this is as big as the movie Star Wars! This is why he is so greatly touched – we are moving into the next realm

“That's all! I'm cooked!”

- This is f*ing right now - the energies are so vast, and so fast in this moment – what he got listening to Teran about meeting Yogi Basha and others: it was the simple joy that you don't get from drugs or other things: it comes from deep inside of us: it's like meeting Captain Ashtar and Sananda – it's not about invasion fleets or scary stuff; it's about joy!

T: Reading: Gordon Duff's article – disclosure – the new sheriff!
2016-04-08 Disclosure: The New Sheriff

[SEE BELOW]

T: Asking about the the Vatican is going to be changed – has to be dismantled

R: they are not teaching what Yeshu taught

T: send some love to Hillary, as this is not what she wanted – she will want some revenge!

Big Will: as of yesterday, RT news has laid out 9/11 as an inside job – a full prime time news article.

R: maybe the folks got a heads up by Putin to start talking about this stuff

BW: a decree as of Ap 6th, a 14 point decree when Obama had the nuclear situation

R: the criminals in Congress do not want us to dismantle nuclear weapons as they want to play the Armageddon story in the Middle East; yet Obama is moving that way and the MSM is complicit in not going there: BO is working with Queen Noor and Lady Di about XZERO NUKES.

- As we drop [give up] the nukes, we can move into the realm of cleaning up the planet

T: we need to help these ones leave the planet

BW: agrees about Bernie taking NY

T: as she was born into the 13 families and Bernie was not -she was tortured etc from the time she was a baby; the archonic energy and twisting of the true way of the Force that we all have be banished from the earth and from any other

P: explains the note about the 2 videos about archons / archonic energies [SEE BELOW]

Life is like an obstacle course,
That's never really done,
Until I come to loving that,
It's only just begun!

Yup, it is so much about attitude, yes? One person says, "Dang, another mountain to climb." The other person says, "Wow! Look at that mountain! Let's go climb!" Truly, as mentioned in the report, we are emerging out of a chaotic, emotional time, and may feel like the beat up soldier on the battlefield, but hang in there! You'll make it! You can do it! There is amazing Life to come!

Indeed, this building of a new paradigm is not happening on a blank slate/chalk board. As healers and teachers, and supporters of the great awakening, we will undoubtedly come face to face with powerful established folks entrenched in patriarchal ways. It's time to buck up, get up, and meet the old with the new, showing the beauty and power of the open heart. This requires being soft and hard, sensitive and tough, and triumphing over victim consciousness with unconditional self love. Go for it!

Limits of Hope

2016-04-07 Beginning Today, Al Jazeera America Presents Original 4-Part Documentary Series 'The Limits of Hope: Inside Obama's White House'

By Tambay A. Obenson | Shadow and Act

President Obama

Beginning today, Thursday, April 7th at 10pm ET and continuing nightly through April 10th, Al Jazeera America will present an original new documentary series, "The Limits of Hope: Inside Obama's White House." Co-produced by Al Jazeera America with Brook Lapping and the BBC, the four-part series is overseen by acclaimed veteran producer Norma Percy.

The series gives viewers an authoritative, insiders' account of Obama's White House, with exclusive interviews that re-live the battles, the decisions and the key moments that reshaped America and the world. Interviewees include President Barack Obama, himself, reflecting on historic moments since his 2009 inauguration and what will define his time in Office, as well as key players in his administration including former Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner, political advisor David Axelrod, senior advisor Valerie Jarrett, Representative Nancy Pelosi, former chief of staff Rahm Emanuel, former attorney general Eric Holder, former CIA Director Leon Panetta, economic advisor Christina Romer and many more.

For millions of Americans, the election of President Obama, the first African American president, marked a new era of hope. His rise to the Oval Office aroused worldwide enthusiasm, but the newly appointed President found the change he promised was harder to come by than he anticipated. He immediately faced economic crisis, entrenched political opposition and two inherited wars. Now serving his final term, President Obama faces the reality of a narrowing timeframe and mounting political questions that could have a profound impact on the U.S. judiciary, nuclear proliferation, and the spate of terrorism in Europe and around the world.

In four episodes, the documentary covers the economic crisis of 2008 and President Obama's first 100 days in office; the healthcare battle and the rise of the Tea Party movement; the crisis in the Middle East and finally, the contentious domestic issues Obama faced during his Presidency – race, gun control and immigration. In-depth interviews reveal what happened inside the room where the President wrestled with momentous decisions including how to repair the world economy, which side to back as the Arab Spring erupted, and how to achieve ground-breaking healthcare reform despite opposition from Republicans.

"We're proud to present this in-depth account of the Obama White House, featuring an exclusive interview with the President himself, talking about the issues he and his Administration faced, goals he achieved and the legacy he will leave," said Kathy Slobogin

"The Limits of Hope" was directed by Paul Mitchell, Sarah Wallis, Delphine Jaudeau, and Mick Gold. Norma

Percy is the series producer and Brian Lapping and Paul Mitchell are executive producers. The docu-series is narrated by former White House correspondent and CNN Washington Bureau Chief Frank Sesno

2016-04-08 Disclosure: The New Sheriff

By Gordon Duff, Senior Editor on April 8, 2016

The video shows, the pen writes, then it doesn't...and this changes everything

THERE IS A VIDEO IN THE ORIGINAL, THE ADDRESS OF WHICH CANNOT BE COPIED.

<http://www.veteranstoday.com/2016/04/08/disclosure-the-new-sheriff/>

... by Gordon Duff, Senior Editor, with Ian Greenhalgh

Several years ago, one thing became clear — that if Keshe technology was real, the world would change, and hydrocarbons would be a thing of the past as fuel, and that our world economy, an energy slave economy, was dead. It goes further.

Governments, the US, Israel and Britain, have been contacted about “sharing” technology that would, if Keshe is right, make the planes, missiles and even the billion dollar cradle to grave surveillance nightmare useless.

Now we can share what we do know, the basis for Keshe theory, for the Keshe machines, for Keshe’s irritating language of “magravs” and “plasma” is very real. His “crap” actually makes electricity “out of thin air” just like he said and, if that is true, and it is, then the whole thing is going to burn to the ground, the whole sick mess.

As of today, we can categorically state that Keshe tech is very real, that physics we are taught in school, physics the US publicly espouses as valid, is not. We had known that several major aerospace companies were involved in projects, not only outside conventional science but much further, including time travel, thought inducement and deep space exploration, all using capabilities beyond conventional reality.

We now know that though it all may not be true, much of it is now “probably” true and some of the “impossible” is certainly true. We begin:

Iranian nuclear physicist and peace activist, Mehran Keshe, has officially announced that it was his technology that brought down an American RQ170 Sentinel drone over Iran and disabled the AEGIS destroyer, the USS Donald Cook, in the Black Sea.

A VeteransToday.com parody by Steve Scroggins

We have, during the past few weeks, been able to verify that Keshe energy units do actually work. We had test results from other sources, but we did our own:

Veterans Today began investigating Mehran Keshe several years ago. Some of this story we have told before, so please be patient. Keeping it short as possible, I assigned Colonel Hanke, who works with DARPA on energy projects, along with Mike Harris, to work with the Keshe group.

Then I sent Dr. Riccardo Maggiore of MIT to visit Keshe in Italy. We then went further and there was a good reason. Iran had captured an American RQ170 stealth drone, something impossible.

<https://youtu.be/bX2xg3OddiM>

Moreover, Keshe had two groups of painfully inept detractors, a pair of cabals from the "free energy community," a group that makes the new "truther" groups seem impressive. For those unaware, there is a huge online community of fraudsters who haunt the anti-vacc and natural medicine websites.

To learn about these folks, simply google "keshe" and you can list them. One in Morocco was picked up and questioned last week about missing children and another, in Belgium (and Netherlands, depending on day of the week) showed up on an INTERPOL notice tied to a "trafficking and slavery" complaint.

Our partnerships with ECIPS, DESI and Center for Counter Terrorism have been very useful. They have given us full access to agencies across Europe. This has been a nasty business with some very nasty people and, quite frankly, dealing with this kind of thing is child's play for the VT gang.

Where my notice was tweaked was when MI 6 started to trip over themselves in their usual delightfully "oh so British" fashion, as Michael Shrimpton puts it. We knew this...Keshe had worked in Iran with a massive budget on projects unrelated to anything arms inspectors have looked at. Keshe doesn't do missiles or bombs.

We also know that China has taken a strong interest in Keshe. Our concern is how China is volunteering to throw endless funding to move Keshe medical and "other" tech from the "imaginary physics" stage to operation. Either we all trust China, something I am not totally averse to doing, or begin playing with governments we long ago discovered can't be trusted. There is no easy way out of this.

Let's move on to something less dark, something more fun to talk about, and I will turn this over to Ian Greenhalgh:

A little over two years ago, Preston James wrote an article that seems almost prescient in light of recent intelligence:

Secret Space war XIII: Alien Partners tell Putin, "Don't Worry, We've Got Your Back"

Russian President Vladimir Putin seems to be walking with a prideful swagger in his step lately.

"Unsubstantiated rumors have been seeping out of deep contacts inside Russian Space Command the last few weeks that, not only does the new Putin's Russia have a well developed Secret Space war Program, but that this Program provides substantial ultra-high-tech back-engineered offensive and defensive weaponry.

And that such advanced weaponry can and will be deployed if Israel is able to once again deploy their hijacked American War Machine to start another Proxy War, this time in the Ukraine against Putin's New Russia."

This advanced weaponry appears to have been deployed against the USS Sitting Duck in the Black Sea, an event that sent very real shivers down the spines of American and Israeli military and political leaders (if they possess spines, that is). Preston goes on to ask:

"Do Russians now have access to Space War Weapons based on back-engineered Alien ET technology gained through a new treaty negotiated between Putin and a certain group of Alien ETs who are enemies of the group controlling the World Zionists (WZs) and the International Zionist Crime Syndicate (IZCS)?"

The answer to this appears to be a definite 'maybe'; it would certainly explain why Russia has stood firm against the Zionists and the criminal operations in Ukraine and Syria, despite wide-ranging sanctions that, despite denials, have undoubtedly damaged their economy and the ruble and an ever-growing belligerence on the part of certain figures in NATO such as Gen. Breedlove. In short, maybe Putin is standing up to the criminals because someone does have his back.

Preston also made a good guess at what some of the offensive weapons that have resulted from back-engineering might be:

"The actual state of back-engineered Alien ET technology for Russian weapons systems is not known by American Intel at this time. But estimates are constructed using advanced algorithms on advanced computers to make estimates. And the latest version of the Russian Sunburn Missile System is a good example of an advanced weapons system that can be used to project what could be considered a fairly good estimate of the current state of Russian Secret Space war weaponry that has been deployed.

Some military technology experts believe that the Sunburn is based on Alien ET back-engineered technology. Why would they think this? Because the latest versions of the Sunburn are believed to have hiving capability and the ability to travel at speeds up to 7,000 to 9,000 miles per hour. That is a lot more than the officially released figures of Mach 2.1.

Hiving is the ability of these missiles when launched in mass to remain in constant communication with one another on special scrambled frequencies which constantly change.

If one or more Sunburn missile is shot down or interfered with, the rest adjust in response to the threat, re-target, and resort to random defensive maneuvers to make sure every target is still covered and attacked by priority of importance. Some of these maneuvers are so gravity-defying, it is suspected that anti-gravity technology has been utilized in the latest model of the Sunburn missiles. It is also suspected that new anti-matter light and time warping technologies are used to provide advanced "cloaking" for these Sunburns.

If these rumors are even close to accurate it means that any USN ships within range of these Sunburns (which may be substantially greater than the claimed 1200 miles), could be sunk within mere minutes. Some experts believe that the USAF (or the USN) has nothing that can adequately respond to the Sunburn, and even the Rail guns and high-powered particle beams which have been secretly deployed on some carriers and destroyers and kept under wraps until needed, or on special Space war orbital platforms, cannot respond fast or accurately enough to stop all of a hive of Sunburns that are launched.

"Now here is the grim truth. No matter how good American Intel has been about the Russian's Secret Space War Program and the level of advanced back-engineered Alien ET technology, which now has been deployed, it is limited. And it is unlikely that the full story has been gained by American Intel, due to the various levels of secrecy and "need to know" installed around the Russian's secret Space War Program.

Of course this kind of layered secrecy has been installed around America's Secret Space War Program. America's secret Space War program is unfortunately now run by foreign offshore-controlled, private defense Contractors, most of whom are deeply infiltrated by Israeli Intel, some of whom are actually deep cover spies who report directly to Russian Intel, unbeknownst to the Israelis who are cocky and getting quite careless lately."

Part Two

Hi, this is Gordon back again. Figure it is spring here, half a foot of snow on the ground, and we are trying to find a way to lead where this will go, where it must go. I have friends in Syria, Iraq and elsewhere without electricity half the time, often without water, and we now know we can produce electricity not quite out of nothing but genuinely free energy.

without water, and we now know we can produce electricity not quite out of nothing but genuinely free energy.

What is unique about Keshe's program is its direction. When he talks about peace, he means it. You know, what has irritated so many about Iran and China is their unwillingness to, despite their burgeoning military spending, threaten neighbors or build offensive capabilities. Yes, Iran has missiles but Israel and Saudi Arabia, not the best neighbors for anyone, have nuclear weapons and a reputation for bad behavior.

If Keshe tech can take down an RQ170, what would it do with an F18 or even an F35 as Keshe reminds us in Video 2?

The key is going to be, based on the assumption that we are dealing with something real, how we can make this something more than a military game or, worse still and a scenario we are prepared to deal with as best possible, how long do we wait until defense contracting firms and the secret society types move from "trolling" to poisoning or let's say shooting at Keshe and his wife Carolyn while they are in their car. No, wait... that's already been done.

I am not "at home" around Keshe people but what are "Keshe people?" There is an article out there accusing me and the CIA (funny?) of running the upcoming Keshe "event" later this month. I did, however, review applicants to attend, a list that was carefully screened based on the requirement of the hosting country, one that has very strong policies on things like terrorism and crime.

I found lots of engineers, world experts on nanotechnology, more than a couple, but curiously, oil and chemical company execs who seem to really want to be there.

What this can be, and maybe what it is, above all things is a way for people to find each other and, without government handouts and permission from the Wizard of Oz, take control of their lives, their future and their way of life. I don't see room for what we have learned to recognize as "government" in this scenario. I will cry when the last one is shut down.

2016-03-28 Angela Davis on Not Endorsing Any Presidential Candidate: "I Think We Need a New Party"

In a Women's History Month special, we speak with author, activist and scholar Angela Davis. For more than four decades, Davis has been one of most influential activists and intellectuals in the United States. An icon of the 1970s black liberation movement, Davis' work around issues of gender, race, class and prisons has influenced critical thought and social movements across several generations. She is a leading advocate for prison abolition, a position informed by her own experience as a fugitive on the FBI's top 10 most wanted list more than 40 years ago. Davis talks about the "fascist appeal" of Donald Trump and explains why she is not officially endorsing any candidate in this election. "I believe in independent politics," she says. "I still think that we need a new party, a party that is grounded in labor, a party that can speak to all of the issues around racism, sexism, homophobia, transphobia, what is happening in the world. We don't yet have that party."

AMY GOODMAN: In this Women's History Month special, we turn to the author, the activist, the scholar Angela Davis. For more than four decades, she's been one of the most influential activists and intellectuals in the United States. An icon of the '70s black liberation movement, Angela Davis's work centers around issues of gender, race, class and prisons, and has influenced critical thought and social movements across several generations. She's a leading advocate for prison abolition, a position informed by her own experience as a fugitive on the FBI's top 10 most wanted list more than 40 years ago.

In 1944, Davis was born in Birmingham, Alabama. The city would become known as "Bombingham" as a result of so many Ku Klux Klan bombings. In 1963, the Klan blew up the 16th Street Baptist Church in Birmingham, killing four girls and injuring 22 others.

I spoke to Angela Davis this month just after Donald Trump initially waffled over his refusal to condemn an endorsement by David Duke, the prominent white supremacist and former Ku Klux Klan leader.

ANGELA DAVIS: Well, it didn't really surprise me. We've seen the development of a kind of a fascist appeal over the time that Donald Trump has been attempting to achieve the Republican nomination. But I can say that it would have been extremely difficult to imagine someone like this having a legitimate claim to the Republican nomination even at the time that—when we thought that it was—it was totally amazing that George W. Bush might eventually become the president of the U.S. But I think this is an indication of the extent to which conservatives and the Republican Party have been creating this base that can, indeed, serve as support for someone like Donald Trump.

AMY GOODMAN: And what the Ku Klux Klan means? It's hard to ask that question, because you think everybody knows, but I think it's very important to talk about their historical significance and the violence that they wrought.

ANGELA DAVIS: And, of course, we're still today witnessing the legacy of the Ku Klux Klan today, which isn't to say that the Ku Klux Klan has been put to rest. That organization still exists. But the Ku Klux Klan, of course, evokes the racist, terrorist, violent history of—associated with the era following slavery up to the present. It doesn't seem to me to be a question whether one would disavow the Ku Klux Klan. But, of course, the extent to which Donald Trump was beating around the bush, seemingly in an effort not to alienate those who might support the Klan today, is an indication that he is helping—

AMY GOODMAN: And it was right before Super Tuesday, which had a number of Southern states. And when he came out in the debate to say he was disavowing, that was after Super Tuesday.

ANGELA DAVIS: And it's interesting, of course, that he won precisely those states below the Mason-Dixon Line that historically have been associated with that kind of violent racism.

AMY GOODMAN: So let's go from the Republicans to the Democrats. During a recent private Hillary Clinton fundraiser in Charleston, South Carolina, right before the South Carolina primary, a Black Lives Matter activist named Ashley Williams held up a banner reading, quote, "We have to bring them to heel," which was a reference to controversial statements Hillary Clinton made in 1996 about some youth whom she called, quote, "superpredators." Williams then confronted Clinton, saying, quote, "I am not a superpredator."

ASHLEY WILLIAMS: I'm not a superpredator, Hillary Clinton.

HILLARY CLINTON: OK, fine. We'll talk about it.

ASHLEY WILLIAMS: Can you apologize to black people for mass incarceration?

HILLARY CLINTON: Well, can I talk? OK, and then maybe you can listen to what I say.

ASHLEY WILLIAMS: Yes, yes, absolutely.

HILLARY CLINTON: OK, fine. Thank you very much. There's a lot of issues, a lot of issues in this campaign. [...]

ASHLEY WILLIAMS: I know that you called black youth superpredators in 1994. Please explain your record. Explain it to us. You owe black people an apology.

HILLARY CLINTON: Well, I'll tell you what, if you will give me a chance to talk, I'll—I'll tell you something. You know what? Nobody's ever asked me before. You're the first person to ask me, and I'm happy to address it, but you are the first person to ask me, dear. Um, OK, back to the issues.

AMY GOODMAN: So, that was Hillary Clinton saying, "You were the first person to ask me about this," speaking to Black Lives Matter activist Ashley Williams, who confronted Clinton at a private fundraiser. So Ashley was then escorted away. Williams says a friend contributed $500 so she could attend the private event. The protest was in response to these controversial comments Hillary Clinton made while speaking at Keene College in New Hampshire in 1996.

HILLARY CLINTON: They are often the kinds of kids that are called superpredators—no conscience, no empathy. We can talk about why they ended up that way, but first we have to bring them to heel.

AMY GOODMAN: That's what she said in 1996. On Super Tuesday, Hillary Clinton was confronted by a young Somali-American woman during a campaign stop at a coffee shop in Minneapolis who asked Clinton about her superpredator comments. The quiet back-and-forth ended with Clinton growing frustrated and telling the young woman, quote, "Well, why don't you go run for something then?" Angela Davis, if you could respond? There's so many different things.

ANGELA DAVIS: I think it's really wonderful that Black Lives Matter activists are participating in this electoral period in this way, forcing candidates to speak on issues about which they might not speak. And, of course, Hillary Clinton should have said, "Well, I was wrong to use the term 'superpredators.' What I know now, I didn't necessarily know then." There are many ways in which she could have disavowed it. And we know, of course, that the Clinton administration was responsible, at least in part, in large part, for the buildup of what is now called mass incarceration with the passage of the 1994 crime bill. It seems to me that if she's interested in the votes of not only African Americans and people of color, but of all people who are progressive and attempting to speak out against the racism of overincarceration, she would simply say, "I was wrong then," that "superpredator" is a racially coded term. It's so interesting that she is—she tends to rely on a kind of universalism that prevents her from acknowledging the extent to which racism is so much a force and an influence in this country.

AMY GOODMAN: And yet, in primary after caucus after primary, when there's a large African-American population, she wins that vote over Bernie Sanders.

ANGELA DAVIS: Well, of course, if we look at the historical situation, we know that her husband, Bill Clinton, was extremely popular in black communities all over the country and one of the most popular presidents in the—before Obama, perhaps the most popular president in the history of the country, except perhaps Abraham Lincoln.

AMY GOODMAN: What did Toni Morrison call him? Our first black president?

ANGELA DAVIS: Well, but she did not exactly say that. What she was referring to was the fact that he did acknowledge black culture in ways that other presidents had not. And in a sense, you can say that there was a conscious appeal to black communities in ways that—I think, that his wife, Hillary Clinton, is not capable of developing. But yeah, I think we find ourselves in a very difficult situation, with Bernie Sanders being the alternative and, of course, Bernie Sanders as—declaring himself a socialist and raising a whole number of absolutely important issues and putting pressure on her. And that's good. But I think, on the one hand, you have a candidate who is so reluctant to address racism, at one point she said, in response to the slogan "black lives matter," "all lives matter." But, of course, if all lives did matter, then we would not have to say that black lives matter. And on the other hand, you have Bernie Sanders, who engages in a kind of economic reductionism that prevents him from speaking—from developing a vocabulary that allows him to speak in ways that enlighten us about the persistence of racism, racist violence, state violence.

AMY GOODMAN: What would you say Bernie Sanders should say that would satisfy you in how he understood the issue of racial and economic oppression?

ANGELA DAVIS: Well, I would think that he might recognize the extent to which capitalism is racial capitalism, as Cedric Robinson pointed out. Capitalism was built on slavery. And throughout the history of capitalism, we see the extent to which racism is intertwined with economic oppression. It seems that he does not have the vocabulary that allows him to acknowledge the role and the influence that racism has played historically. He thinks that economic justice will automatically lead us to racial justice.

AMY GOODMAN: Who are you endorsing?

ANGELA DAVIS: Endorsing? I don't endorse. But let me say that, well, to be frank, I've actually never voted for one of the two-party—two major parties in a presidential election before Barack Obama. I believe in independent politics. I still think that we need a new party, a party that is grounded in labor, a party that can speak to all of the issues around racism, sexism, homophobia, transphobia, what is happening in the world. We don't yet have that party. And even as we participate in this electoral process, as it exists today, I think we need to be looking ahead toward a very different kind of political process. At the same time, we put pressure on whoever is running. So I'm actually more interested in helping to develop mass movements that can create the kind of pressure that will force whoever is elected or whoever becomes the candidate to move in more progressive directions.

2016-03-28 Freedom Is a Constant Struggle: Angela Davis on Ferguson, Palestine & the Foundations of a Movement http://www.democracynow.org/2016/3/28/freedom_is_a_constant_struggle_angela

In a Women's History Month special, we speak with author, activist and scholar Angela Davis, professor emerita at the University of California, Santa Cruz. Her latest book is titled "Freedom Is a Constant Struggle: Ferguson, Palestine, and the Foundations of a Movement," a collection of essays, interviews and speeches that highlight the connections between struggles against state violence and oppression throughout history and around the world. "There are moments when things come together in such a way that new possibilities arrive," Davis says. "When the Ferguson protesters refused to go home after protesting for two or three days, when they insisted on continuing that protest, and when Palestinian activists in Palestine were the first to actually tweet solidarity and support for them, that opened up a whole new realm."

AMY GOODMAN: I want to ask you about your new book, Freedom Is a Constant Struggle: Ferguson, Palestine, and the Foundations of a Movement. Talk about this coming together of movements.

ANGELA DAVIS: Well, oftentimes there are historical conjunctures that one cannot necessarily predict, but they're moments when things come together in such a way that new possibilities arrive. And I think that when the Ferguson protesters refused to go home after protesting for two or three days, when they insisted on continuing that protest, and when they were—when Palestine activists, Palestinian activists in Palestine, were the first to actually tweet solidarity and support for them, that opened up a whole new realm. I don't know whether many people are aware of the extent to which Palestinian-American activists were involved, from the very outset, in the protest against the killing of Mike Brown in Ferguson. But it has been absolutely inspiring to watch the development of young activists. And I have to catch myself when I say the, you know, "youth movements" and "black youth movements." I have to catch myself and recognize that these are the movements of our time. They're not youth movements per se, because youth have always led radical movements. But it's very exciting to live during this era. And as I've pointed out many times, I think it must be extremely exciting to be young now. But it's also exciting for those of us who are older to see this promise that has emerged in such powerful ways for the first time since perhaps the '60s and the '70s.

AMY GOODMAN: Angela, you talk about the—not so much the intersectionality of identities, but the intersectionality of struggles.

ANGELA DAVIS: And I think that is what is characteristic of the work that young organizers are doing. They recognize that it's not possible to effectively create radical consciousness by focusing on a single issue. And whereas many of the movements that challenged police killings in the past focused almost in a myopic way on the prosecution of the individual perpetrator, now movements, these movements, are taking on larger questions, such as structural racism, institutional racism, state violence, the connection between terrorism and racism, the extent to which the counter—the so-called counterterrorist ideologies and approaches are transforming the way racism functions, transforming state violence. And so, it's so exciting to see the facility with which young activists are able to engage with this intersectionality of struggles. It's about racism, but it's also about homophobia, and it's about transphobia, and it's about addressing ableism. It's about creating a sense of international solidarity. And the extent to which Palestine has become central to efforts against racism in this country is an indication of how important international solidarity has become.

AMY GOODMAN: You write "On Palestine, G4S, and the Prison-Industrial Complex." Explain what G4S is.

ANGELA DAVIS: G4S is the third-largest private corporation in the world, third only to Wal-Mart and Foxconn. It's a private security corporation. It engages in the ownership and operation of private prisons, private policing and many other activities related to policing and surveillance and imprisonment. It is, interestingly, the corporation that hires more people on the continent of Africa than any other corporation in the world. So, actually, looking at the work that this corporation does gives us a sense of the extent to which security, security as propounded by those who believe that security can only be achieved by violence, whether structural violence or actual violence, is—that is the position represented by this corporation. And, of course, it has played a major role in upholding the occupation in Palestine. And so, we can say, from Palestine to private prisons all over the world to deportation—this company also provides transportation for the deportation of Mexican immigrants. So, if one looks at that corporation, I think that all of the issues that we are addressing can be seen. In a sense, the private corporations recognize the intersectionality of issues and struggles, and we have to do that, as well.

AMY GOODMAN: You write at the beginning of this essay, which was really a speech that you gave, "As I reflect on the legacies of struggle we associate with Mandela, I cannot help but recall the struggles that helped to forge the victory of his freedom and thus the arena on which South African apartheid was dismantled," as you remembered Ruth First and Joe Slovo and Albertina Sisulu and Govan Mbeki and Oliver Tambo. I mean, what you bring to so much of this is in-depth look at what's happening here, but globalizing it.

ANGELA DAVIS: And I think that we have to have a global perspective. We need—we used to call it internationalism. And I think we need to create a 21st century internationalism. None of the past struggles in this country, progressive struggles, took place in isolation from what was happening in the rest of this world. And certainly the Africa liberation movements helped to move struggles against racism in this country forward. And I think we need to begin to think in those terms. Palestine represents what, it seems to me, South Africa represented in the 1980s and up until the end of apartheid. So, you know, while we need to focus our attention on what's happening in Latin America and Asia and Europe—of course, the immigration struggle there, the racism that is so attached to issues of the refugees in Europe—Palestine seems to me that pivot that allows us to enlarge and broaden and extend our consciousness.

AMY GOODMAN: Angela Davis, professor emeritus at the University of California, Santa Cruz. Her latest book, Freedom Is a Constant Struggle: Ferguson, Palestine, and the Foundations of a Movement. When we come back, we'll talk with Angela Davis about President Obama's trip to Cuba and Assata Shakur. Stay with us.

President Obama concluded his historic visit to Cuba last week as the first sitting U.S. president to visit the island in 88 years. During his trip, Obama met Cuban President Raúl Castro and delivered an address to the Cuban people, the first-ever live address by a sitting U.S. president to the people of Cuba. But one issue not raised during his visit was the fate of Assata Shakur, the legendary figure within the Black Panther Party and the Black Liberation Army who now lives in Cuba, where she has political asylum. Shakur was convicted May 2, 1973, of killing of a New Jersey state trooper during a shootout that left one of her fellow activists dead. She was shot twice by police during the incident and has long proclaimed her innocence. We speak with author and activist Angela Davis, a longtime supporter of Shakur.

AMY GOODMAN: "A Song for Assata" by Common. This is Democracy Now!, democracynow.org, The War and Peace Report. I'm Amy Goodman. In this Women's History Month special, we continue our conversation with Angela Davis. Last week, President Obama became the first sitting U.S. president to visit Cuba in 88 years. During his trip, Obama met with Cuban President Raúl Castro and delivered an address to the Cuban people, the first-ever live address by a sitting U.S. president to the people of Cuba. One issue that was not raised publicly during his visit was the fate of Assata Shakur, the legendary figure within the Black Panther Party and the Black Liberation Army who now lives in Cuba, where she has political asylum.

Assata Shakur was convicted May 2nd, [1973], of killing a New Jersey state trooper during a shootout that left one of her fellow activists dead. She was shot twice by the police during the incident. In 1979, she managed to escape from jail and later fled to Cuba. She has long proclaimed her innocence. In 1998, Democracy Now! aired her reading an open letter to John Paul II, who was pope at the time, during his trip to Cuba. This is an excerpt.

ASSATA SHAKUR: In 1977 I was convicted in a trial that can only be described as a legal lynching. In 1979 I was able to escape with the aid of some of my fellow comrades. I saw this as a necessary step, not only because I was innocent of the charges against me, but because I knew that [in] the racist legal system in the United States I would receive no justice. I was also afraid that I would be murdered in prison. I later arrived in Cuba where I am currently living in exile as a political refugee.

AMY GOODMAN: That was Assata Shakur speaking in 1998 in an open letter to Pope John Paul. Our guest, Professor Angela Davis, has been a longtime supporter of Assata Shakur. I asked her about Assata's case and the thawing of U.S.-Cuban relations.

ANGELA DAVIS: I've been involved in the campaign to save Assata's life for all of those decades. And now, of course, as there are new openings with respect to Cuba, we welcome the end of the embargo, the blockade, but at the same time we have to be attentive to what this might mean for Assata, given that there is $2 million reward on her head, that she has been designated as one of 10 most dangerous terrorists in the country.

AMY GOODMAN: And a former Republican presidential candidate, Chris Christie, the governor of New Jersey, was really leading that charge.

ANGELA DAVIS: Absolutely, absolutely. So I think that now is the time to focus attention on Assata and to—I mean, it’s interesting. We were talking about popular culture today, and I understand there was an episode of the television program—

AMY GOODMAN: Madam Secretary.

ANGELA DAVIS: —Madam Secretary, in which an Assata-like character was approached by the secretary of state, and the secretary of state acknowledged that she had been wrongly convicted. And the issue is resolved by promising to provide the support of the State Department to Assata in a new trial in the U.S.

AMY GOODMAN: Right. And it was part of the process of normalization in Madam Secretary.

ANGELA DAVIS: Exactly.

AMY GOODMAN: Téa Leoni plays Madam Secretary, the secretary of state—

ANGELA DAVIS: Exactly.

AMY GOODMAN: —when she goes down to Cuba. And in that situation, they said that Assata Shakur’s case was instrumental to normalizing relations. And I want to go to a clip of that.

ELIZABETH McCORD: [played by Téa Leoni] There are people who want you to come back to the U.S. to serve your sentence. What if I could ensure that you would be at a minimum-security prison close to your daughter in Connecticut? You have a grandson you haven’t met. You would be eligible for parole in three years.

AFENI RAHIM: [played by L. Scott Caldwell] Wouldn’t that be convenient for you? I simply turn myself over to the feds, and you get whatever it is you want.

ELIZABETH McCORD: Under COINTELPRO, the FBI wiretapped your defense team, and they suppressed forensic evidence that made it clear you didn’t fire the murder weapon. Afeni, based on these findings, Attorney General Cronenberg is offering you a new trial. And we will make sure that these files are splashed across every newspaper in the country.

AMY GOODMAN: That is the CBS drama Madam Secretary doing their own kind of take on a kind of Assata Shakur, who ends up agreeing to come back to the United States, and the secretary of state saying she would get a fair trial and something to do with time served.

ANGELA DAVIS: Well, yeah, Assata has not seen her grandchildren. It’s horrendous, the extent to which the repression associated with the era of the late 1960s and 1970s continues to this day. And we might also mention the fact that vast numbers of people are still behind bars from that era, members of the Black Panther Party—Mondo we Langa, Ed Rice. My co-defendant, Ruchell Magee, has been in prison for over 50 years. So I think that when we put all of these things together, they create a kind of invitation for increased radical activism for trying to resolve these issues that have been decades in the making.

AMY GOODMAN: Angela Davis, professor emeritus at University of California, Santa Cruz. Her latest book is titled Freedom Is a Constant Struggle: Ferguson, Palestine, and the Foundations of a Movement.

2016-03-28 As Sanders Sweeps 3 States, Meet the Young Immigrant Activist Helping Him Mobilize Latinos

On Saturday, Vermont Senator Bernie Sanders won landslide victories in Washington, Alaska and Hawaii, chipping away at front-runner Hillary Clinton's lead in the race to win the Democratic Party's nomination for the White House. Sanders won at least 71 percent of the vote in each state, including 82 percent in Alaska. Sanders will still need to pull off big upsets in Wisconsin, New York and California to catch up with Clinton in terms of pledged delegates. Clinton also maintains a huge lead among superdelegates, members of the Democratic Party establishment who could change their vote at any point. While Saturday may have been the biggest day of the Sanders campaign, the corporate media largely downplayed his victories. We speak with Erika Andiola, press secretary for Latino outreach for the Bernie Sanders campaign and a prominent immigrant rights activist.

AMY GOODMAN: We turn back right now to the race for the White House. Again, on Saturday, Vermont Senator Bernie Sanders won overwhelming victories in Alaska, Washington and Hawaii, chipping away at front-runner Hillary Clinton's lead in the race to win the Democratic Party nomination for the White House. Sanders won 73 percent of the vote in Washington, 71 percent in Hawaii, 82 percent in Alaska—all three caucuses. Clinton now has 1,243 pledged delegates to Sanders' 975, so they're about three—less than 300 delegates apart. In addition, Clinton's secured support from an overwhelming number of unelected superdelegates made up from the party establishment, though they could change their allegiance at any point.

Joining us now is Erika Andiola, press secretary for Latino outreach for the Bernie Sanders campaign. She's a prominent immigrant rights activist from Arizona, though she's based here in New York through the election.

Welcome to Democracy Now!

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Thank you for having me.

AMY GOODMAN: We had a clip of you on our show in Colorado after Bernie Sanders' win. Can you talk about the significance of this landslide this weekend? The corporate media hardly paid attention.

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Of course.

AMY GOODMAN: But it was a sweep, a three-state sweep.

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Mm-hmm.

AMY GOODMAN: And they were, all three, caucuses. Why does Bernie Sanders do so well in these caucus contests?

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Of course. Well, see, Bernie, of course, we see in the media, when we had Arizona, when we had the previous elections, that we saw that, you know, there was already this narrative that Bernie was done—right?—that the campaign was over. Many in D.C. were asking him to drop out. Bernie has said, "We're going to continue until June. We want to—we're still going to fight for the nomination." And Washington was one of those key states that we wanted to see how we're going to do there. And we thought we were going to do very well, and we absolutely did, not only in Washington, but we also did in Alaska and Hawaii, and, I think, gives us amazing momentum not only for our campaign, but for our supporters to continue and to push forward until the end.

AMY GOODMAN: I mean, in Washington state, party officials estimated more than 200,000—

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Turnout was amazing.

AMY GOODMAN: —people participated, which was close to the record set in 2008.

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Absolutely. The turnout was absolutely amazing. We were getting reports of, you know, people filling up the caucuses. And one of the things that is really, really amazing about our own supporters is that, you know, Bernie's supporters are very, very pumped up. You know, they're very excited about going out to caucus. And it's a lot of young people, it's a lot of new voters. And I think, for us, you know, that really gives us an advantage at caucuses, which—it helps. Right? It's not only people going to cast their ballot; it's people going in there to rally, to go in one side of your candidate and to really make a difference on how, you know, we can turn out that specific precinct.

AMY GOODMAN: Can you talk about the significance of what happened in your state of Arizona?

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Mm-hmm.

AMY GOODMAN: You had people waiting on line for, say, five hours. Many people ended up leaving, older people, and it turning out—the massive cutback on polling places in—well, in the largest city, Phoenix, is in Maricopa County, 200 to—down to 60. They said they were saving money?

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Mm-hmm. It was very unfortunate, I think, for us, I mean, not only as a campaign. I think—we don't know what would have happened if it was different, right? But I think, for us, and Bernie said it, you know, it really is a form of voter suppression. It is a form of really, you know, disenfranchising so many voters that are so excited to go out. It was a high—a very, very high turnout, and we ended up seeing 2,000-people lines still around midnight.

AMY GOODMAN: Let's go for a moment to Bernie Sanders talking about Arizona.

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Of course.

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: In the United States of America, democracy is the foundation of our way of life. People should not have to wait five hours to vote. And what happened yesterday in Arizona is a disgrace. I hope that every state in this country learns from that and learns how to put together a proper election, where people can come in and vote in a timely manner and then go back to work.

AMY GOODMAN: Erika Andiola, your response to what he said?

ERIKA ANDIOLA: No, it is definitely unfortunate, I think, for us. I mean, I'm from Arizona. I really—I really care about the fact that our people are excited about voting. And we do have a general election coming up. And we're hoping, and we're—you know, we're putting out there this message that "Don't be discouraged. I know you waited for five hours. But this is about fighting back and making sure that we do have voters who are there, who are able to do this faster, not five hours."

AMY GOODMAN: You're a well-known immigrant rights activist, not just in Arizona, but all over the country. You were undocumented. Your house—you and your mom—was raided. Your mother and your brother were both taken by ICE?

ERIKA ANDIOLA: That's right.

AMY GOODMAN: And you had to fight to have them released?

ERIKA ANDIOLA: That's correct.

AMY GOODMAN: Talk about that happening in 2013 and how you ended up working for Bernie Sanders.

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Yeah, I mean, it was definitely an eye-opener for me. It was—I've been organizing immigrant rights, you know, immigrant rights community for a while now, for a couple of years. But I think that year, it was definitely—you know, it came home, right? ICE came to my own home. And I really realized that, you know, it is definitely—I have DACA now, but my family is still vulnerable, and millions of families across the country are still vulnerable. And I think, for us, is—you know, how can we make sure that we keep families together? And I think one of the amazing parts about working for Bernie was how open he was to see two DREAMers—that's me and another, César Vargas, who's from here, from New York—who he was open to bring us and asked us, "How do we make a good platform? How do we make sure that our immigration platform is a correct one to keep families together?" And we have the best platform right now to make sure that we do that.

AMY GOODMAN: Earlier this month, we spoke to Dolores Huerta, the civil rights activist, co-founder of the United Farm Workers of America. She has endorsed Hillary Clinton for president, criticized Bernie Sanders' record on immigration reform.

DOLORES HUERTA: In terms of the Latino community, we are completely in support of Hillary, simply because Bernie just hasn't been there for the Latino community. You know, he had a really good opportunity in 2007, when Senator Ted Kennedy, Hillary Clinton, Senator Durbin from Illinois—when they proposed a good immigration reform bill. And we had all of the momentum behind us at that time, because we had had all of these marches all over the country for immigration reform. And Bernie, unfortunately, came out against that bill.

AMY GOODMAN: Dolores Huerta. Can you respond to this, Erika Andiola?

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Absolutely. It's unfortunate that they don't put this—the entire story out there. And the fact is that this 2007 bill was one of the bills that, you know, yes, a lot of people worked very hard for, but at the end of the day they did put an amendment there that literally allowed for workers, migrant workers, to be able to be exploited. And one of the things that Bernie has fought for, for so many years, is making sure that workers, whether migrant, whether undocumented or documented, are treated the way they're supposed to be treated, in the right, you know, human—as humans, we have the right to make sure that we are paid the fair wages, that we're not under slavery conditions. And he said, "If this happens, I'm not going to vote for something like that." He was backed up by LULAC, by, you know, many organizations who do support migrant rights, workers.

And for us, that's exactly a reason why, because in 2013 he came back again, the bill was much better, he voted for it. And not only that, he has called many, many times to make sure that families continue to be together. I guess that our plan is making sure that when he gets elected, not only do we pass—continue to push for immigration reform, but that he stops deportations right away, that he stops the raids. And he has asked President Obama over and over again, "Please stop the raids." You know, don't do what basically was done in my own home, which is just not right, and we need to stop that.

AMY GOODMAN: So, you're here in New York. You have flown in. The next major races are Wisconsin, California and New York, here, on April 19th. What are your plans? These are absolutely key for Bernie Sanders' success.

ERIKA ANDIOLA: You know, for us, it's continuing to excite the community to go out and vote. And here in New York and also in Wisconsin—Wisconsin is going to be a very, very key state for us. And one of the things that we do know is that it is an open primary. It is a state where we—you know, people can actually register on the spot, so they can go and register to vote there. And for us, turnout is very important. We know that when there is a high turnout, there is a big possibility of us winning the state. And so we are making sure that we're mobilizing. We have thousands of volunteers across the state. We also have thousands of volunteers across the country who are calling in to different states that are key for us. And that has definitely been, you know, what has pushed Bernie Sanders forward until June. And, you know, we're going to—we're not going to stop. It doesn't matter what pundits, it doesn't matter what, you know, the establishment tell us. We're going to continue until we win.

AMY GOODMAN: What do you say when people say, well, he won in white states, like, for example, they say Washington state?

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Right. Well, look, in Washington, we were—we went into Yakima, is one of the—about 45 percent to 50 percent of the community there is Latino—very diverse county. Bernie had a rally there. We had 7,000 people turn out. We ended up winning the county by 75 percent or 76 percent. It was amazing turnout. It was also great support that we had. And it's a very diverse community. And so, you know, it's unfortunate that there is this narrative now out there. You know, first Alaska was the most diverse state; now it's not the most diverse state. You know, the reality is that Latinos—

AMY GOODMAN: We have to leave it there.

ERIKA ANDIOLA: Of course.

AMY GOODMAN: I want to thank you for being with us, Erika Andiola.

2016-04-07 Melissa Harris-Perry on Race, Media, and the Story Behind This Year's Presidential Race

WATCH FULL SHOW <http://www.democracynow.org/shows/2016/4/7?autostart=true>

the Maya Angelou presidential chair at Wake Forest University, where she directs the Anna Julia Cooper Center on Gender, Race, and Politics in the South. She's also executive director of the Pro Humanitate Institute at Wake Forest and runs the Wake the Vote initiative.

Last month, professor, author and political commentator Melissa Harris-Perry had a very public breakup with MSNBC after four years of hosting her eponymous weekend show. Reaction extended from the blogosphere to the floor of the House, where Illinois Congressman Luis Gutiérrez stood next to a sign of the NBC peacock with the hashtag #NBCSoWhite and suggested the network has a racial diversity problem. But even though her show is now off the air, Melissa is still sparking critical conversations. She joins us to talk about this year's presidential contest, voter ID laws, anti-LGBT legislation and much more.

NERMEEN SHAIKH: We end today's show with professor, author and political commentator Melissa Harris-Perry. For the past four years, she hosted a popular weekend show on MSNBC. But the show ended last month after a dispute between her and the network. After her show ended, Democratic Congressman Luis Gutiérrez of Illinois spoke out about her departure. He gave a speech from the floor of the House while standing next to a sign of the NBC peacock with the hashtag #NBCSoWhite, REP. LUIS GUTIÉRREZ: What's going on at NBC? Last week, Wake Forest University professor and MSNBC television host Melissa Harris-Perry was abruptly pulled from the airwaves without even a chance to say goodbye. NBC said they wanted a show that was more about politics. But I have to say that when I watched the show, Melissa Harris-Perry was talking about politics in a unique way, like few others on the airwaves. She brought diverse voices to the table to talk directly and unapologetically about the politics of race in America, a major theme among candidates and a critical conversation to include on the airwaves. I'm sad to see her go, just like Alex Wagner before her, but I am even sadder because I don't think these are isolated cases.

AMY GOODMAN: That was Democratic Congressman Luis Gutiérrez speaking on the House floor about the important role of Melissa Harris-Perry's show on MSNBC. Well, her show may be off the air, but she's still sparking critical conversations.

To talk more about this year's presidential contest, controversial new voter ID laws, the U.S. media, anti-LGBT legislation and much more, we are joined by Melissa Harris-Perry herself. She is the Maya Angelou presidential chair at Wake Forest University, where she directs the Anna Julia Cooper Center on Gender, Race, and Politics in the South. She's also executive director of the Pro Humanitate Institute at Wake Forest and runs the Wake the Vote initiative.

Welcome to Democracy Now!

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: It's so nice to be back.

AMY GOODMAN: It is great to have you. So there is Luis Gutiérrez—

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: That was amazing.

AMY GOODMAN: —the congressman, with that hashtag, #NBCSoWhite. Why did you leave MSNBC?

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: I didn't mean to leave. I certainly wanted to stay. I refused to go back on air, initially, simply because what had happened was the show was gone, and I felt that they were asking me to come back to anchor my hours, but not to actually host my show.

AMY GOODMAN: What do you mean?

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: So, the show had a certain kind of branding. We did certain kinds of work. We brought particular voices. We had a perspective and a point of view, and we had a lot of editorial control. That had been true for four years. But over the course of really the months that began in 2016, we had moved to kind of—and I want to be clear: I think the word "politics" is the wrong word. It was horse-race election coverage. Right? Which is not the same thing, from my perspective, as "politics." I wasn't prepared to simply do horse-race election coverage. And so, I had not been invited to host my show nor to even anchor during my hours for weeks. After some other media outlets asked questions about that, I was then invited back, not, again, to host my show, but to anchor 10:00 a.m. to noon, Saturday and Sunday. I felt that doing so would have been to signal to the audience that everything was fine. And everything was not fine. Therefore, it was important to actually not be there, so that it would be a clear and visible signal that everything was not fine.

AMY GOODMAN: You mean your show at that time was now called Place for Politics, like the rest of MSNBC is branded? It wasn't Nerdland or MHP anymore?

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: That's correct.

NERMEEN SHAIKH: So who were the—just give us a sense of the kinds of voices that you had on your program.

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: I mean, you know, for us, we were—we were a roundtable, basically, of, at any moment—sometimes it might be a one-on-one, but it was often three to four people at the table. We worked really hard to make sure that we had diverse voices, so that both meant racially diverse, it also meant diverse in perspective, it also meant diverse across genders, it also meant diverse across perspectives. And, you know, so, for us, that meant, at any given moment, you might have, you know, a cis heterosexual white man like Dave Zirin, who nonetheless is one of our favorite black feminists, but is a cis heterosexual white man, doing—kind of performing a black feminist analysis of sports, at the same time we might have, you know, Kenji Yoshino, who is a queer Asian constitutional scholar, who would be there to talk to us about the Supreme Court. So he's doing kind of very clear, straightforward, straight-ahead analysis of the Supreme Court, but also doing it in a body that might be unusual.

AMY GOODMAN: Well, you brought up sports, so tell us what happened Super Bowl time—not that sports were your big thing, but this Super Bowl, 50th anniversary, was certainly huge with what Beyoncé did.

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: Yeah. Well, so, Beyoncé dropped "Formation" the night before the Super Bowl. For us, that was kind of right in the wheelhouse of all the things we cared about.

"Formation" took up the issue of Hurricane Katrina. And, of course, as you know, I lived in post-Katrina New Orleans. My husband is an advocate and civil rights attorney who did a lot of post-Katrina work in New Orleans. And, of course, our show had been thinking about New Orleans for a long time—and, frankly, thinking about Beyoncé for a long time. So we immediately knew that we wanted to address this video, address the popular culture questions, address the racial questions, address the Black Lives Matter imagery that emerged as a result. And we were told not to do so.

AMY GOODMAN: What do you mean? Who told you not to do so?

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: The sort of senior—what's the word? He wasn't—he's not a producer on our show, but he was—he's the person, Chris Peña, who was sort of over what happened on the weekends. And he simply came in and said, "No, you can't do it." And so there was a back-and-forth struggle for a few hours.

AMY GOODMAN: I mean, in terms of ratings, dealing with Super Bowl and dealing with Beyoncé, I can't imagine you couldn't—that there would have been a bigger audience for anything else. But also, I mean, the Black Panther imagery, the—

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: I don't think it's about ratings, though. This was never said to me in any way as being primarily a ratings question. It's really a direction question. It was a—and I want to be really clear about something: I think, in an organization built on hierarchy, that those at the top have every right to change direction. And so, one of the things that I think has gotten lost is, as though I have an argument with the directional change. Now, I do, in the sense that that isn't the direction I wanted to go in, but that isn't really where the—sort of where the fight broke out. I'm the leader of an organization; I've changed direction in my organization.

The issue was that there was a directional change that was not being communicated either to me as an employee or, even more importantly, to my audience. And so, what happened was, we were simply disappeared, with no communication to the audience, and then I was going to sort of reappear as though everything was fine. That, for me, was what was unacceptable. So, the email communication that was leaked was about me explaining to my team why I was making their life harder by not coming back to host. And clearly, the portions of it that ended up in The New York Times were the most inflammatory or potentially inflammatory portions relative to race, which is the point at which I made a decision to leak the entire letter, so that people could read the entire email and make a decision on their own about what they thought I was saying, one way or another. But the issue wasn't that MSNBC made a decision to go a new direction. That's their right. It's their channel. It was that they weren't communicating it.

AMY GOODMAN: But you are a politics professor. You deal with—this is, I mean—

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: I have a Ph.D. in it, that's right.

AMY GOODMAN: And here we are in one of the most contested elections we have ever known.

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: Mm-hmm.

AMY GOODMAN: Your thoughts, what you can't say now on MSNBC?

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: Well, I guess what I'd say is, for me, what's—I have—you know, it was interesting to listen to Congressman Gutiérrez stand there and say that he saw politics in our show. I certainly felt that we were completely capable of covering an election. We had covered elections previously. We've been on air for four years. Obviously, we covered the 2012 election.

AMY GOODMAN: You were in Iowa when your show was in Iowa, but you weren't on your show?

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: I did not—I did not—well, I was on my show as a guest, but I was not allowed to host my own show. Ari Melber hosted my show; I was a guest on it. That was part of how we knew things were going wrong. I was not allowed to host my own show, nor was I invited to be any part of coverage in New Hampshire. I was not invited to host my show from South Carolina, despite the fact that I live in North Carolina and was in South Carolina. I have no idea why. No one communicated any of those things to me.

AMY GOODMAN: You wrote in your letter, "I will not be used as a tool for their purposes." This is a letter that you wrote to your staff. You went on, "I am not a token, mammy, or little brown bobble head. I am not owned by Lack, Griffin, or MSNBC. I love our show. I want it back."

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: That's true. I did. I loved our show. It's been gone for a little over a month, and I am surprised even about how much I miss it. The people I worked with, turns out, were—I said I didn't know how few friends I had, until suddenly the folks who I talked to every day for four years were gone. They were the people I talked to about politics all the time, and I miss them profoundly.

That said, in the end, when I was invited to come—again, to come back to host those hours or to anchor those hours, but not to host the show, I definitely felt that I was being used in order to signal that everything was fine. And again, everything was not fine. When I talk about mammy, the symbol of mammy is one kind of historically where the African-American woman cares more about the family of the employer than about her own family. And what I want to be really clear about was that I care more about the MHP show family, about our audience, about our team, than I do about Andy Lack or Phil Griffin's family, their profits, their ratings—which seem to be just fine. Again, this wasn't an argument about whether or not they were making the right decisions for their bottom line.

But again, my primary job is as a college professor. My primary intellectual, personal and political commitments are actually not about how many TV minutes or hours I get. I felt like I needed to have been communicated with clearly, so that I could make a decision about what direction I was going in. The decision to not have a conversation with me about any of that, the decision to leak not only this information but other information later when the conversation started, the attempt to silence me once we had the struggle—and particularly in the context of MSNBC having rehired Brian Williams and having made public comments where they said things like, you know, "We're in an NBC family where second chances are always possible, where redemption is an important part of who we are"—it is, frankly, painful that after four years of working extremely hard for these people, after giving up a lot of family time and personal time and professional time, to be discarded in that way. And so, for me, although I don't know what the reasons are, I am pleased that, ultimately, I cared more about my family than about theirs.

NERMEEN SHAIKH: Well, very quickly, before we conclude, can you talk about your experience in the context of the concept "crooked room" that you talk about in your book, Sister Citizen?

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: You know, I probably can't, only because I don't know that we can analyze ourselves in that way. Sister Citizen is about the stereotypes that African-American women are bound by, so the ways that we think—that we know who black women are, based on some very old stereotypes of mammy, of Jezebel, of the angry black woman. And so, I sometimes feel like I see them happening, particularly in the context of media and social media. But the truth is, we're not very honest about who we are as ourselves. None of us can see ourselves very well. It's kind of like we can't hear the sound of our own voice because of how it reverberates. So, I will leave it to others to write the thought pieces about that.

AMY GOODMAN: Well, we want to ask you to stay with us, and we'll do a post-show with you—

MELISSA HARRIS-PERRY: Sure.

AMY GOODMAN: —post it online at democracynow.org.

2015-04-06 The Catastrophe Has Been Averted – Congratulations – AA Metatron & The Company of Heaven

By annamerkaba on April 6, 2016 • (5)

Dearly Beloved Masters of the Universe,

The catastrophic event of the century indeed has been averted by the participation of those of you who have chosen to sway the scales towards enlightenment and ascension for all. The catastrophic event of the century has been averted due to the diligent adherence of the lightness of BEing by those of you stationed on GAIA, who have come to anchor and hold the frequencies of peace and balance throughout the chaotic unfoldings as human way of life changes forever, as human cognition rapidly transforms and transitions onto a new frequency of light.

It is due to your endeavors and your anchoring of light, and holding of space for those still working towards a peaceful resolution of conflict throughout your known world, that much has been achieved in the weeks of late. It is due to your diligent upheaval and transmutation of that which no longer belongs on the shores of GAIA. It due to your determination, patience, stability, peaceful outlook, and benevolent co-creation of a new paradigm, that GAIA as you know her has transitioned into a higher frequency.

It is due to your attentive love frequencies that your beloved GAIA has moved onto another spectrum of light, has moved up an octave, and shall never again experience the same dense principles by which she has operated for eons. It is due to your unwavering upholding of that which is, and assistance of all whom your way shall come in transitioning onto a different frequency of BEing. It is due to your endless plight for freedom of thought, that today we stand here before you communicating freely with those who can hear us. It is due to all of you - the ground crew - who paved the way and orchestrated a coming of age for all of humanity.

And it is with deepest gratitude and the accompaniment of the heavenly abodes, that we bow to you in reverence for all that you are, for all that you have accomplished thus afar.

And so, we congratulate you on a job well done, on another milestone which has successfully been completed, and welcome you once again to the creator's room so that you can once again put on your creative hats and begin to manifest a new reality into your world, into your surroundings, into your cognitive understanding.

We welcome your ideas and await your direction as to the manifestation of the next steps in accordance with the universal law of abundance. We wait for your imprints and your directions via your thoughts and desires, so that we can assist you in manifesting that which has not yet been manifest into your world.

We ask that you allow your dreams to become your reality. We ask that you fully and completely let go of the idea of lack, for the idea of all that you wish all that you need is right there for the taking. We wait and we are ready to help you manifest anything and everything that you desire into your new world.

We are ready to rebuild a new foundation for those who are yet to come, for those who shall bring a new frequency into your awareness. For those who shall continue raising the vibrations of human collective consciousness and GAIA as she continues her benevolent journey back home.

We wait for your cooperation, direction and guidance. For you are the ones that shall manifest that which is necessary, needed and welcomed by all, into the new reality structure. It is you who shall be able to bring forth the necessary technologies, new healing modalities, agricultural innovations, spiritual awakenings and comprehension of all that is, into the hearts and minds of humanity. It is you who stand tall and proud of your achievements, for it is through your vehicles of choice and through your willingness to live according to your divine blueprint that all the changes that are happening on your planet at this very moment in time are possible!

For all of you are gods in the making, for all of you are eternal being of light, for all of you are sparks of divine creations and all of you together form a new fabric, a new matrix, by continuing to weave a new reality into the already established paradigms, through your vibration and through your interconnectedness, through your vehicles of choice you form a new structure, a foundation on which a new reality can and shall be built.

Stay true to your hearts calling, stay true to that which indeed you are. Listen to the guidance you are receiving from your very own higher selves, and remember to communicate with us daily so that we can continue to support your endeavors with informational encodings which shall be delivered into your vehicles of choice in order to introduce the necessary decrees into your energy field and assist you in shifting your focus onto that which is truly important, so that you can live up to your souls purpose, your blueprint with which you have come onto this plane of existence and your heart's desire.

Know that we are walking with you hand in hand and foot in foot, know that we are waiting for your directions, know that we are assisting you in manifesting all that you desire, know that it is so for it is.

We are with you. We love you. Goodbye for now.

ARIES NEW MOON

Astroeyes Evolutionary Astrology

This is a powerful and supercharged New moon! This New Aires Moon is conjunct (sitting with) Uranus and Eris....and squares Pluto (in the ongoing Cardinal Square)....and it is also a Super Moon! A Super Moon is when the Moon is in its nearest approach to the Earth...the gravitational pull is stronger and it affects the tectonic plates and our psyche. This New Aries Super Moon is also triggering the Cardinal Square with Uranus in Aries and Pluto in Capricorn.....activating radical change, and revolutions. Uranus is an awakener, encouraging us to break free of old patterns! Change is required! It is as if we have reached a starting point on a new journey...and initiation to the next level. The Universe is speaking loudly!! It is time to take a courageous step on this evolutionary journey towards the evolution of our Souls....for both ourselves and for the collective!

This Aries New Moon seems to have a message.....no matter how chaotic, intense and transformative the last 6 weeks have been, and still are.....there seems to be a "new" energy of motivation, movement and the urge to start something "new". This Aries New Moon is opening up a new beginning...as it moves you into a heightened level of higher consciousness. It is almost like the Universe is saying.....take a step...any step....just move!! There is no way to hide now. Things are being put in our faces.....right in our faces.... and now is the time that we DO have to deal with them. If you stumble and fall.....it is time to pick yourself up and brush yourself off....and move forward again!! Both Aries and all New Moons are about creating the "new". Starting something "new".....manifesting and creating the "new".....and we are all in the process of Co-Creating the "New" world and Co-Creating our newly evolved selves!

But first remember that....New Moons mark the beginning of a new cycle. New Moons are also the most spiritual and intuitive moons of the whole Lunar cycle. It is a wonderful time to manifest, meditate and create! Each New Moon brings with it a download of evolutionary energies that gives us the knowledge to create a beautiful future. During this powerful New Moon....meditate and manifest on Peace....within yourself and in the World. Meditate for direction and guidance during these very powerful energies.....

The Aries energy is about passion and initiation.....it is the pioneer energy, the crusader energy. It is about taking action, courage, and walking the talk, and making it happen.....it is also the male energy. Aries, on the gray side.... is also the warrior energy.....it can bring about arguments, out of bounds ego, abuse, sexual abuse, war/fighting, violence, and accidents, especially with metal. During this powerful Aries new Moon, channel the energy into the high side of Aries and become that spiritual warrior that protects all humanity equally, along with the Earth. Become the crusader of your higher mission, exercise, get caught up in your passion and keep busy in a positive way. Steer away from the negative side of all this Aries energy. Manifest during this New Moon....that the "hot spots" in the world (and in your own world) along with their leaders, also head to the high side of this energy.

Impulsiveness is also a part of the gray side of Aries, and if you feel inspired to act...be sure that when you take that "leap of faith", you have figured out how to navigate the air waves to be able to stay afloat. It is also very important to make sure that the changes you make and the actions you take are not just good for your own self growth (the "ME"). The changes and the actions you take within yourself....have to be good for the "whole"....for everyone involved (the "WE"). Aries energy is about the courage that can help you persevere. Aries energy wants things done now....and can have bouts of anger...as patience is one of the things that Aries doesn't have...but is working towards.

This powerful Aries New Moon can also give us the ability for constructive outcomes. Consider it bringing "opportunities" where you can look deeper into your selves....into your Soul. It can open up to you and give you that powerful energy to surrender to the areas and things that no longer support the integrity of your life, and no longer vibrate where you are now vibrating.....and then use that Spiritual Warrior energy to take the action (Aries New Moon ruled by Mars) to make the changes you need to make....to move with awareness into your own unique commitments..... as you are co-creating the "new" you!

With this Aries New Moon.....we also have the Dwarf Planet Eris conjunct the New Moon.... and also conjunct Uranus, which is part of the Cardinal Square. Eris is known as the Goddess of Chaos and Discord (she is said to have actually started the Trojan War!). There sure is a lot of Chaos and Discord going on in the world now....and it seems to be all around us. Eris also adds a feeling of discomfort to whatever she touches. When we add Eris to the fiery Aries New Moon and Uranus (constant change, humanity, the god of Earthquakes and Lightning bolts, able to see the big picture).....you can almost feel the Chaos! Then you add it all to the Cardinal Square as Uranus is part of the Cardinal Square.....you can feel the Chaos...change, transformation and urgency.....you have no choice but to feel it. Again you can no longer avoid it....you have to make some changes....you have to move.... You have to move away from the things, people and places that are not vibrating where you are....that you no longer feel comfortable around....and do it in the most compassionate way. You don't have to burn bridges....you can try to just distance from. This is powerful and intense energy. Chaotic....yes.....but remember....out of Chaos comes Creativity!

Mars, which rules this Aries New Moon.....is sitting with Saturn.... Both of them in Sagittarius (international, travel, higher knowledge, joy, optimism. Mars (warrior, crusader, pioneer, anger, passion, action) adds some action energy to Saturn...and brings in an added focus on international policies, threats, and actions. Could be a pivotal time in the world with terrorism and in our own country with the current elections. Saturn also comes in and Squares (friction and stress) the conjunction of the South Node, Ceres and Chiron (all in Pisces)....and it also activates the North Node and Jupiter by opposition...both in Virgo. When talking about the South Node (past lives) and Chiron (the wounded healer and teacher) in Pisces.....the Universe is saying that it is time to heal all wounds....especially the wound of the Collective. The "wound" of separation. Separation from Source. We have been in the energy of separation for life times.....enhanced through fear...judgment etc. When talking about the North Node (the area we are moving towards) and Jupiter (master teacher and knowledge, religions, Joy, optimism) in Virgo....we talk about how to heal the wound... as we head to our future and Ascension..... we are also heading towards oneness...we are all one! Jupiter brings in spiritual optimism and initiates a shift in consciousness (north node). For both the individual and for all humanity. This aspect can also enhance your abilities as a mentor and a healer!

Remember that we are co-creating our world with our thoughts and our intentions daily. The choices you make....are creating your future. We are learning to look at the big picture. To get a "picture" of how things can look down the road. But we don't have to see the Big Picture in detail or know exactly how it will turn out.....to move forward!

need to ask for guidance in how to navigate these energies in the best possible way for ourselves....so that we can be the best spiritual crusaders for our tribe..... our community..... and for all humanity. We need to look at the big picture with optimism for the "new" we are creating.....so that we can enjoy and embody the "Joy" that is the gift of the "new". This is combining a lot of energies into one boiling pot. It is time to make the changes you need to make. It is time to move forward. It is time to take a step....any step....just start moving! You are being given everything you need from the Universe to have the courage and strength to forge ahead. Meditate and manifest and create that the changes will be navigated with ease and grace.

Be careful and cautious with this New Moon as we are trying to incorporate many powerful energies and downloads that we have received over the last few months. Watch where you're walking, how you're driving, watch out for others, and what you say, as the energies are quite active and strong. They also can come on quite suddenly and become frustrating, and at times dangerous. It is also a time that the energies can act out in accidents...so be extremely cautious. There can also be a lot of relationship interactions & misunderstandings, along with those looking at breakups. There can be a lot of Drama.....don't get pulled into it. Feelings of anger can also rise to the surface. Find ways to release these energies.

The Earth itself may have a hard time incorporating all the energies from this powerful New Moon, There could be some natural rebounding, major storms, earth quakes, volcanoes etc., throughout the Earth. There is also unrest... in many areas of the world. This powerful Aries New Moon can bring tension, anger and war type of energies to these situations and others throughout the world. Manifest daily and help to create a beautiful reality and a peaceful world..... for all humanity, for yourself, your loved ones, and your community. Meditate.....connect with the Earth and Listen!!! Manifest and pray for Peace throughout the world.

It is time to take the time to Meditate during these intense energies. As I have heard said before.....if you have to schedule in 15 minutes to meditate....you probably need an hour!! Meditation not only relaxes you and puts your body into a peaceful state....it is also a time that you can receive incredible guidance, if you listen! Meditate and manifest on Love in all areas. Meditate and manifest on balance in all areas. Manifest and create a beautiful reality.....a beautiful world for yourself, your community, all humanity, the Earth, our Solar System and the Galaxy. Manifest a world that holds, Peace and Love as its highest gift.....Love of all.

These are the energies affecting all of humanity and the Earth. These energies also affect you individually, according to how they activate your own birth chart.

A federal judge in Oregon on Friday ruled that the lawsuit brought against the U.S. government by a group of youths last August can go to trial—a huge victory for the case climate activists are calling "the most important lawsuit on the planet right now."

The lawsuit, filed by 21 plaintiffs ages 8-19, and climate scientist Dr. James Hansen, states that the federal government is violating their right to life, liberty, and property, as well as their right to public trust resources, by enabling continued fossil fuel extraction and use.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Thomas Coffin in Eugene, who called the case "unprecedented," rejected motions by federal lawyers and representatives of fossil fuel groups to dismiss the lawsuit. He stated in his decision (pdf) that the plaintiffs "give this debate justiciability by asserting harms that befall or will befall them personally and to a greater extent than older segments of society."

There is a need for a court to assess the "constitutional parameters of the actions or inactions taken by the government," Coffin said.

Philip Gregory, who represents the plaintiffs, said in a statement that the decision is "one of the most significant in our nation's history."

"The court upheld our claims that the federal government intensified the danger to our plaintiffs' lives, liberty, and property.... The next step is for the court to order our government to cease jeopardizing the climate system for present and future generations," Gregory said. "The court gave America's youth a fair opportunity to be heard."

Lawyers for the fossil fuel groups said the lawsuit posed a "direct, substantial threat" to their businesses, an argument Coffin rejected. The defendants have 14 days to file objections to the ruling.

One plaintiff, Kelsey Juliana, said the decision "marks a tipping point on the scales of justice.... This will be the trial of the century that will determine if we have a right to a livable future, or if corporate power will continue to deny our rights for the sake of their own wealth."

The decision was lauded by environmental activists.

"This is as important a court case as the planet has yet seen," said Bill McKibben, co-founder of climate group 350.org. "To watch the next generation stand up for every generation that will follow is as moving as it is significant."
