TOMMI Prize. Meet the Kids Jury! Children test electronic toys, apps and computer games

Since 2001, the children's software prize TOMMI has been awarded every October at the Frankfurt Book Fair. The prize presents high-quality games and is intended to protect children against game content that is not suitable for them. The special feature: children have the last word here. The Anna-Seghers-Bibliothek is the only library in Berlin to participate in the identification of the winners with a children's jury and numerous events for school classes. For three weeks in September, children between the ages of 6 and 13 are testing the nominated games and rating them.

Through the jury's activities, the children learn how to deal with computer and console games critically, and their media competence is sustainably improved. In addition, they learn to make critical, thoughtful, and responsible judgements, discuss them, and record them in writing.
