Hebrew College invites applications for the Korman Chair in Inclusive Jewish Education. This endowed professor provides academic and entrepreneurial leadership, vision, and scholarship for our Center for Inclusive Jewish Education and serves as a core faculty member of our Shoolman Graduate School of Jewish Education. The Korman Chair will teach and mentor graduate students, build and sustain partnerships with academic and community-based organizations dedicated to enhancing the quality of Jewish education for diverse learners including children with special needs, and innovate professional development systems and services.

The ideal candidate will have these qualifications:

- PhD, EdD, or equivalent degree
- Demonstrated academic leadership skills
- Excellence in teaching at the graduate level, including experience with on-line and distance learning technologies
- Experience in research, service, and/or advocacy for children with special needs and inclusive education
- Experience with formal or informal education of children with disabilities in the Jewish community

Specific areas of expertise may vary but could include:

- Jewish education
- Interdisciplinary teamwork for assessment and intervention
- Family engagement and parent support
- Differentiated curriculum & instruction
- Early childhood education
- New technologies and social media platforms for learning and inclusion
- Positive youth development
- Community partnerships for education excellence and affordability
