Harnessing Digital Data to Accelerate Drug and Gang Investigations

March 5, 2018

8:00 am – 12:00 pm

Restricted to Sworn Law Enforcement Officers, Analysts, Corrections Officers, or Criminal Justice Professionals

In this interactive session, attendees will experience first-hand how digital forensics technology can accelerate an entire investigative process to help investigators unlock critical evidence to break cases faster. Using a drug/gang investigative scenario, gang investigators and prosecutors will learn how emerging digital forensics analytics, data management capabilities, tiering strategies, and secure workflows can change the way they can access, analyze, and act on critical data at different points in a gang investigation. The workshop will address key digital evidence trends that IACP and others have identified, such as the increased reliance on evidence from Cloud and Social Media accounts and the emerging interest in making data from digital sources available to gang investigators, first responders and prosecutors to support the public safety mission.

In this session, attendees will learn how to: • Transform digital data into evidence that a non-technical investigator can use quickly and intuitively. • Leverage data from Private Social Media and Cloud accounts much earlier in a gang investigation. • Quickly build the complete intelligence picture by analyzing the vast volume of digital data, from multiple data sources, in a single view. • Deploy secure, collaborative investigative workflows that extend digital data extraction, delivery and analysis capabilities to the right people at the right time, while supporting chain of custody requirements and standard operating procedure. • Develop an agency-wide digital forensics architecture that makes extraction and analysis capabilities available to gang investigators, first responders, examiners, and prosecutors while preserving the integrity of evidence."
